The economic situation in the Abbasid period in the light of Arabic poetry

حيات الله بن عبدالحسيب*

Abstract

The layers of the Abbasid period were not clearly defined because of the historical stages that the country was going through at that time. However, this overlap was clear in comparison with the modules of the economy of that era. We saw that it represented a mixture of feudalism and the remnants of the enslaved slavery with relative development of industries and crafts. On this basis, it is difficult to divide society, but from another aspect we see the existence of two classes: the ruling class, and the execution class, the rich and the poor class.

We have divided the research into a preface and three sections. The first is about the description of poverty through poetry, the second is about the manifestations of waste of Muslim money and the imposition of money in society, and the third is about the means of livelihood for the poor's.

Keyword: Economics, Poverty, Abbasid period, Poetry, economic situation, earning.
